Wohl Communication Services, Inc. Announces New Service Addition

September, 2011 – Gaithersburg, MD: Wohl Communication Services Inc. (WCS), the global provider of disability accommodations, announced Remote Online Accommodations as an addition to their list of services. Many institutions are utilizing telecommuting technologies that allow test takers to take high stakes exams from their workplaces, homes or other remote locations while protecting the security of the examination process. WCS provides skilled service providers who efficiently provide authorized assistance to test takers with special needs through telecommuting technologies coordinated with test delivery organizations.

WCS's online services include reading, recording, interpreting and translating the exam(s) utilizing technology approved by the test delivery organizations.

Wohl Communications Services CEO Myrna Wohl explains, "Our unique remote service provides the extra assurance of allowing an expert "third party" into the exam process with a firm eye on the goal of meeting ADA requirements while keeping the security of the exam at a priority level."

Wohl Communication Services, Inc., with over 14,000 service providers in over 60 countries, is the global provider of disability accommodations nationally and internationally for the majority of examination delivery organizations and certifications boards. The team at Wohl Communications abides by the American Disability Act (ADA) and has substantial experience in providing professional, experienced and authorized personnel to assist individuals with disabilities and assure a smooth examination experience. Services provided include, but are not limited to, readers, recorders, proctors, scribes, sign language interpreters, foreign language interpreters and translators.
